Agricultural intervention for food security and HIV health outcomes in Kenya	$ 755,929 direct/yr 1	$ 3,561,000 total

Despite major advances in care and treatment for those living with HIV, morbidity and mortality among people living with HIV/AIDS (PLHIV) remain unacceptably high in sub-Saharan Africa (SSA), largely due to the parallel challenges of poverty and food insecurity. Food insecurity and poverty contribute to higher morbidity and mortality among PLHIV, and there has been increasing international recognition of the need to address these factors for a successful global response to the HIV epidemic. Yet, to date there have been few studies to systematically evaluate the impact and cost-effectiveness of promising food security interventions on health outcomes among PLHIV. To address these gaps, together with KickStart, a non-governmental organization based in SSA, we have developed a multisectoral intervention in Nyanza Region, Kenya that includes: a) a microfinance loan (~$175) for purchasing agricultural implements and commodities; b) agricultural implements to be purchased with the loan including a human-powered water pump, seeds, fertilizers and pesticides; and c) education in financial management and sustainable farming practices. We successfully completed an NIH- funded pilot intervention trial that showed that the intervention was feasible, acceptable and may improve HIV- related health. We now plan to conduct a cluster randomized controlled trial (RCT) of this intervention with the following specific aims: Aim 1: To determine the impact of a multisectoral agricultural intervention among HIV- infected farmers on ART on HIV clinical outcomes. We hypothesize that the intervention will lead to improved viral load suppression (primary outcome) and decreased HIV-related morbidity in the intervention arm

Using Information to Align Services and Link and Retain Men in the HIV Cascade (i-ALARM)
The overall objective of this research is to develop and pilot a cascade-oriented health information management (HIM) intervention that will serve as a platform for aligning clinic and community services and improving men’s linkage to and retention in HIV testing, treatment and care. This intervention is being developed through an existing partnership between the NY1 Gugulethu Clinic (or ‘NY1 Clinic’), a primary healthcare clinic in Cape Town, and the Men’s Wellness Centre (MWC), a project of Sonke Gender Justice, a large South African NGO.

Investigating a masculinities-based approach to increase male acceptance of family planning in Kenya

Male partner resistance to FP has been extensively cited as an obstacle to female contraceptive use in sub-Saharan Africa. Scholars emphasize that gender relations cause men to resist FP and call for the incorporation of male gender norms into sexual and reproductive health programs, however a focus on exploring which specific norms of masculinity constrain men's acceptance of FP has been lacking. We conducted formative research to explore how men perceive FP and how men, women and providers perceive men's role in FP involvement. We found that many men appreciated FP's benefits but opposed their female partner's contraceptive use because it undermined the ways they thought of themselves as men. Specifically, men spoke about how FP use threatens masculine norms related to fertility, land, wealth, sexuality, and male household authority, which provokes anxiety about the inability to fulfill prevailing expectations of manhood. Nevertheless, both women and men felt that couples should make FP decisions together and wanted men to be more involved. Drawing on our previous research, we plan to develop a theoretically-informed and community-based intervention that strives to increase male acceptance of female partner FP use by addressing men's fears of a loss of masculinity. The intervention seeks to shift masculine norms associated with FP resistance in the direction of greater FP approval through FP education, small group workshops, and community campaigns. The findings from this study will inform a future cluster-randomized trial evaluating the impact of a masculinities-based approach to increase male FP acceptance on women's contraceptive prevalence.

A Gender Transformative Approach to Family Planning in Kenya
The overall purpose of this project is to test a novel community-based intervention in Kenya that seeks to shift norms of masculinity to be more supportive of family planning in order to increase male acceptance of female contraceptive use.

Measuring and intervening on male acceptance of $ 150000 direct/yr 1 $ 300000 total family planning: A masculinities based intervention in Nyanza, Kenya
This will be the first grant to carry out scale development activities to create a measure of male acceptance of family planning. Unmet need for family planning remains urgent in Sub-Saharan Africa and in Kenya in particular. "Male resistance" is often cited as the reason. We have identified key male norms that shape male acceptance and seek to a) develop a measure of male acceptance of family planning b) develop an intervention to shift men in the direction of shared decision making and joint family planning decisions c) use a gender transformative intervention with men to improve male acceptance of family planning and female family planning use

	Social Network Approaches to Improve Men's HIV $ 100000 direct/yr 1 $ 450000 total testing in Cape Town South Africa
	Recent evidence shows a significant gender disparity in AIDS-related mortality in sub-Saharan Africa: more men die from AIDS than women, despite women having higher HIV prevalence than men. To enter the treatment cascade, men must first know their status by testing for HIV. In South Africa – the country in the world with the largest HIV epidemic and the study setting of this proposed research – 20% of men aged 15-49 years old tested for HIV in the last 12 months compared to 29% of women aged 15-49. To increase men’s HIV testing and ultimately reduce men’s AIDS-related mortality and future HIV transmission, it is essential to implement evidence-based strategies to change men’s behaviors. Our ultimate aim is to develop, implement, and rigorously evaluate a social network intervention that leverages men’s existing social networks (including peers and partners) to address the gender disparity in HIV testing. Aim 1: Describe characteristics of men’s social network ties and social network norms related to HIV testing (i.e. reference group, social expectations, anticipated sanctions/rewards) Aim 2a: Determine the relative influence of (i) types of network ties (peers vs. partners vs. other network members), (ii) components of network norms (i.e. reference group, social expectations, anticipated sanctions/rewards) on men’s HIV testing behavior Aim 2b: Examine the degree to which men’s perceptions of HIV testing norms aligns with actual HIV testing behaviors of social network members Aim 3: Assess the feasibility and acceptability of a social network intervention that transforms social norms related to HIV testing with the ultimate aim of increasing men’s regular HIV testing. Lead of the masculinities based components of the social network analysis; lead of the gender transformative community mobilization efforts to improve men's HIV testing
